Interdisciplinary Certificate in International Law and Human Rights

I. Background and Description

The Joint Certificate in International Law and Human Rights allows graduate students at both the Josef Korbel School of International Studies (Korbel) and the Sturm College of Law (Sturm) to pursue interdisciplinary studies in international human rights law. For decades, students at Korbel and Sturm have shown a strong interest in international human rights law while both schools have historically offered a broad range of courses in the area. Moreover, students from both schools have gone on to careers in various aspects of international human rights work. The Joint Certificate in International Law and Human Rights integrates the strengths and many course offerings at each school with the goal of enriching and deepening the students' understanding of international law and human rights—which they may then carry over into the job market. Please note that students wanting to complete the certificate will need to take a few credits more than their degree requirements because of degree requirements at Sturm and Korbel related to how many credits can be transferred from other schools on campus.

III. Requirements

Completing the certificate requires 35 quarter hours (for Korbel students) or 24 semester hours of credit (for Sturm students). By its nature, the certificate also requires taking courses both on the quarter system (at Korbel) and on the semester system (at Sturm). These are the same courses, just taken for different numbers of credit because of the differences between the quarter and semester systems for Korbel and Sturm, respectively.

STUDENTS INTERESTED IN THE CERTIFICATE MUST APPLY, AND BE ADMITTED INTO, THE PROGRAM. To apply for this program, please visit our web-site at: www.law.du.edu/international-legal-studies/certificate-program.

Revision Date: 2/26/2015.
Generally, students take half their coursework at the Korbel School (including one or two core courses and two to three electives) and half their coursework at the Sturm College of Law (including one or two core courses and two or three electives). Since not all courses are offered every semester or quarter, students are strongly advised to take the required courses and courses they are most interested in as soon as they are offered.

Core Courses (all three required)

L4320- International Law; and

INTS 4940 – Introduction to Human Rights; and

L4319 OR L4290-International Human Rights; or INTS 4936-International Law & Human Rights
