The Civil Rights Clinic (CRC) is an intensive, year-long litigation program in which students represent clients in civil rights cases in federal court under the supervision of clinic faculty. Currently, the focus of the CRC is primarily on the constitutionality of the conditions in which federal and state prisoners are held, including issues such as failure to provide prisoners with adequate medical or mental health care, long-term denial of outdoor exercise, and the free exercise of religion, although any kind of civil rights or civil liberties matter may be on our docket. Some of the claims currently being litigated in the CRC will impact constitutional jurisprudence nationwide. For a more detailed description of some of the current and past cases on the CRC docket, see http://law.du.edu/index.php/law-school-clinical-program/civil-rights-clinic/civil-rights-clinic-cases.

What kind of time commitment is involved?
The CRC requires a substantial time commitment. Though students are not required to spend a set amount of time in the clinic each week, students should anticipate devoting at least 20 hours per week on client-related matters. For this reason and to avoid potential conflicts of interest, it is expected that CRC students will not take on an externship, any other experiential advantage courses, or work while they are enrolled in the CRC.

What are the benefits of taking this clinic?
Working with clients on complex civil rights matters is an experience that students have found intellectually challenging and personally compelling on multiple levels. Students enrolled in this class will have the opportunity to gain substantive experience related to a variety of aspects of complex litigation, including complaint drafting, development of a case theory and discovery plan, researching and drafting various motions, conducting written discovery and depositions, and even potentially appearing and arguing in federal court. In addition, students will develop interpersonal lawyering skills through interviewing and counseling their clients, interacting with opposing counsel, and making decisions as part of a “case team” of students. The cases in the CRC are complex, offering the opportunity to assist an underserved population of clients, while working in an area of constitutional law that is deeply textured, ever-changing and profoundly rewarding.

Where can I get more information?
There will be a Spring 2016 Clinic Fair in the forum on Tuesday, March 22 from 11:00 AM to 1:00 PM. There will also be an information session in Room 170 on Wednesday, March 23 from 12:00 PM to 1:00 PM.

How and when do I apply or register?
Applications for the 2016-2017 year will be available at http://law.du.edu/forms/student-law-office-clinical-programs/apply/. Applications will reopen at 10am on Tuesday April 5, 2016 and must be submitted by 11:59pm on Sunday, April 10, 2016. Late applications will not be considered. Laurie Saraceno, the SLO Administrator, will register accepted students before the beginning of the fall semester.