The purpose of this history is to present a review of the development of the University of Denver School and College of Law during its first one hundred years; to note the school’s contributions to its community and to its profession; and to highlight its pioneer personality as well as its many personalities. These commentaries are offered through a chronological narrative combined with personal reminiscences of a cross-section of the school’s graduates.

From its beginning, the law school has been a strong reflection of the strengths and talents of each of the twelve persons who have served as its dean and the several who were acting deans. We are grateful to each for the legacies they have given to the University. Reliving their experiences, especially those over the first fifty years, made the research and writing of this history a pleasant adventure.

Thanks are due to countless numbers of people who have assisted in innumerable ways with this publication.

Professor Arthur Best deserves special recognition. While serving as associate dean for Academic Affairs, he organized and developed the general theme of the book. He also directed the oral interviews and edited those accounts.

We are especially grateful to the alumni who shared their wonderful memories. The tape recordings of their interviews are preserved at the College of Law, in the Westminster Law Library.

We are indebted to Dean Emeritus Bob Yegge, Dean Dennis Lynch, and Professor Emeritus William Beaney for their encouragement and counsel. Dean Lynch also contributed the chapter introductions.

Our appreciation to Barbara Greenspahn, who did major editorial work and supervised the project in her role as associate dean for Planning. Heartfelt thanks to Beverley Roberts, long-time staff member of the Alumni Office, for sharing her invaluable “institutional memory” in this effort.

We acknowledge the assistance of Steven Fisher and Nancy Mann of the University’s Archives and Special Collections, of Allen D. Breck, professor emeritus of History and historian of the University, of the staffs of the Colorado Historical Society’s Stephen Hart Library, of the Denver Public Library’s Western History Department, and of Diane Hartman and others at the Denver and Colorado Bar Associations. Thanks to Tanya Haynes for her graphic design expertise.

Further, my lasting appreciation to my wife, Mary Lou, and our family, for their constant support and understanding.
