Alumni Scholarships Impact Admissions

Alumni of the University of Denver College of Law are having a significant impact on the school's recruiting efforts through an Alumni Scholarship Program initiated in the fall of 1985. The Program is supported by contributions to the Law Alumni Fund.

As part of an effort to increase its "yield" of accepted students who actually enroll, College officials began the Program for academically outstanding students. The scholarship is a $1,500 merit-based award which accompanies the offer of admission. Acceptances among this rank of applicants have increased from 15 to 20 percent.

In 1982, applications to the nation's law schools began a predicted decline. Law school deans, faculty, and admissions officers faced possible declining enrollments due to declining applications. Most of the schools reacted by intensifying recruitment planning and expenditures. By 1985, law school representation at undergraduate career fairs and national law forums had increased significantly. Publications reflected a new awareness of marketing techniques, and undergraduate pre-law advisors became increasingly important to the law school community.

Although the University of Denver College of Law has increased its participation at national forums, undergraduate school fairs, and pre-law advisor meetings, our efforts have been concentrated in the area of "yield" of accepted students who actually enroll. During this applicant decline, the College of Law has experienced a significant change in its yield ratio. It became apparent that if the law school did not take steps to recruit those students who were already admitted, "the quality of the first-year class could be adversely affected. The Alumni Scholarship Program has been by far the most effective method of increasing the yield.

Winning Paper by Prof. Stephen L. Pepper:
The Lawyer's Amoral Imperative

By Rick Frost

University Relations

College of Law Professor Stephen L. Pepper's paper on lawyers' ethics was the winning submission in the Association of American Law Schools' (AALS) first annual "Call for Scholarly Papers" competition last fall, judged by a panel of nationally prominent scholars.

Chosen from among 26 entries, the paper was presented and distributed at a panel discussion at the January AALS meeting in New Orleans, where Professors Andrew Kaufman of the Harvard Law School and David Luban of the University of Maryland Center for Philosophy and Public Policy provided the initial commentary, followed by lively discussion from the floor. Numerous requests for the paper have followed.

The work, entitled "The Lawyer's Amoral Ethical Role: A Defense, A Problem, and Some Possibilities," argues that lawyers need to be amoral to guarantee citizens' rights. If they don't play a neutral role in advising their clients, people's access to the law will be unfairly restricted — and first-class citizenship depends upon access to the law.

"For access to the law to be filtered unequally through the disparate moral views of each individual's lawyer does not appear justifiable," wrote Pepper. "The values of autonomy and equality suggest that . . . the client's conscience should be superior to the lawyer's.

"For the lawyer to have moral responsibility for each act he facilitates, for the lawyer to have a moral obligation to refuse to facilitate that which the lawyer believes to be immoral, is to substitute lawyers' beliefs for individual autonomy and diversity," Pepper stated.

Professor Kaufman in his commentary at New Orleans referred to the Efforts of Reunion Classes, Agents Boost Alumni Fund to 86% of Goal

The efforts of Reunion Class agents have helped boost the 1985-86 Law Alumni Fund to within 87 percent of its goal, according to Fund Chairman John W. Low, JD '51.

"Thanks to Fund committee members, especially those representing the 1986 reunion classes, we have received nearly $174,000 in gifts and pledges toward our $200,000 goal," Low said. The accompanying "scoreboard" reports the status of Alumni Fund efforts within the reunion classes.

work as...a very valuable addition to the literature and a first rate paper presenting a complete theory to justify...an amoral role for lawyers.

"The paper comes pretty directly from teaching," Pepper says. "It is a point of view I had to work out to teach a course on the legal profession.

"For some students it comes as a shock that there is some discontinuity between what is right and what is the law — that they're not coextensive. For others there is no difficulty in understanding this concept at all," he says. He continues "A lot of what a legal education is, is seeing how substantial and complex that question is."

Pepper paints the individual seeking to use the legal system as analogous to "someone who stands frustrated before a photocopier that won't copy (or whose car won't go) and needs a technician (or mechanic) to make it go."

According to Pepper, "It is ordinarily not the technician's or mechanic's concern whether or not the content of what is about to be copied is morally good or bad, or for what purpose the client intends to use the car. What if the client wants to use the law for some illegal purpose? Then the lawyer has the obligation to withhold access to the law, he wrote.

The problems addressed in his paper are problems Pepper believes need to be explained to law school students. One of these questions, raised by Pepper's argument that lawyers should maintain an amoral role, is: Can a good person be a good lawyer? Pepper's answer: "(A) good lawyer can be a good person; not comfortable, but good."

Professor Pepper's paper will be the topic for a professional education credit program to be presented at the law school's Alumni Day 1986, Friday, June 6.

Placement Report: Market Good for DU Law Graduates

By Florence M. Gilbert
Director of Placement
College of Law

The College of Law Class of 1985 is alive and well and living in metropolitan Denver for the most part. The annual employment survey conducted by the Law Placement Office reveals that the most recent University of Denver law graduates are doing some pretty remarkable things.

The survey shows that for the third consecutive year over 90 percent of the graduates are employed in legal jobs, non-legal careers, are attending graduate school, or have passed the Bar but are not seeking employment. For the 1985 class, 91.3 percent are employed. This statistic was 91.7 percent in 1984 and 90.5 percent in 1983.

The Class of 1985 boasts a woman pilot with United Airlines who plans to also set up an estate practice; a corporation patent coordinator; a real estate developer; a Foreign Service officer in Mexico; a Regis Fellow in South Dakota; an environmental analyst; and a sports agent.

Particularly impressive is the fact that 18 graduates, or almost seven percent of the Class of 1985, are serving in judicial clerks this year.

The 1985 employment survey is based on information known about 265 graduates, almost 96 percent of the 277 individuals who received degrees from the College of Law from August 1984 through June 1985.

Bar results for the group show that 217, or 91 percent of the 238 graduates who sat for the February or July 1985 Colorado Bar examination, did so successfully. A total of 13 graduates reported that they passed the Bar and are still seeking employment.

Overall, 54.3 percent of the class are working in a traditional law firm setting. This percentage includes four sole practitioners. The others can be found in corporate positions, 31 (11.7%); judicial clerkships, 18 (6.8%); government, 13 (5%); public defenders' offices, 9 (3.3%); district attorneys' offices, 8 (3%). A few graduates opted for careers in public service, teaching, Judge Advocate General
Faculty Notes

The Honorable John L. Kane, Jr., JD '60, center, received the University's prestigious Evans Award at the 1986 Founders Day dinner March 7. Sharing in the evening's festivities with Kane, a Denver U.S. District Court judge, were Professor James E. Wallace, associate dean for academic affairs at the College of Law, left, and Professor Thompson G. Marsh, LLB '77, the 1984 Evans Award recipient. Six of the last seven Evans Award honorees have been graduates of the law school.

Several scholarships have been established at the College of Law in recent months, complementing current efforts to enhance the school's student financial aid program.

They include the Zarleno Scholarship Fund, the Henry G. Frankel Memorial Scholarship Fund, both endowed scholarships, and the Pryor, Carney & Johnson Scholarship. The endowed scholarships will each provide an annual full-tuition award from interest earned on the funds. The latter is an annual gift providing two half-tuition scholarships.

"The law school is grateful for these very special expressions of support," Dean Edward A. Dauer said. "Their benefits and their importance exist not only to the students who receive them, but to the College of Law as a whole and, ultimately, to the profession."

It was a desire to give something in return to the College of Law that influenced five law alumni members of the family to establish the Zarleno Scholarship.

Contributors to the Fund include Anthony F. (Tony) Zarleno, JD '28; Mrs. Albert E. Zarleno, whose late husband was a 1933 law graduate; Albert E. Zarleno, Jr., JD '63; Dante L. Zarleno, JD '72; and Vincent A. Zarleno, JD '69.

Tony is a sole practitioner; Albert, Jr., is a partner in the firm of Zarleno, Mott, Zarleno & Winbourn, of which his father was a founding partner; Dante is a partner with the Cogswell & Wehrle law firm; Vincent is with Hein and Associates, an accounting firm.

The Zarleno family needs little introduction to the Denver legal community. Tony serves a patriarchal role and is remembered as one of the "giants" of the Denver trial bar. His late brother, Albert, taught at the law school in the late '30s and early '40s, and served for many years as a referee of the Colorado Industrial Commission.

Albert, Jr.'s practice is limited to asbestos litigation. Dante's specialty is oil and gas title work and he is active with the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation.

Vince was the major force in bringing the family scholarship effort to fruition. Although he admits he has practiced law the least of the Fund contributors, he feels his law degree has helped him in his tax specialty area — and that his best friends are lawyers, most of whom he met in the time he worked in the Denver District Attorney's office.

work and the Colorado Attorney General's office; one is a court librarian.

The average salary for the Class is $30,675. However, the typical 1985 graduate (26%) works for a very small law firm with two to ten attorneys and makes $25,750. By comparison, figures for the Class of 1984 showed about 21 percent working for a very small law firm for a salary of $24,506. The average salary for the 1984 class was $28,624.

Thirty 1985 graduates, compared to 26 one year earlier, went to work for firms with 51 or more attorneys. These graduates receive salaries that range from $28,000 to $40,000 a year.

Most University of Denver law graduates prefer to practice in or around Denver. In 1985, 79 percent accepted offers in the metro area and another 5.3 percent are located in other parts of Colorado. The 41 graduates who left Colorado are employed in 24 states and 2 foreign countries. The largest delegation, seven individuals, is in California. A year earlier, 86 percent of the 1984 graduates stayed in Colorado.
DU Moot Court Teams Continue Winning Pace

"The College of Law's traditional focus on the training of superior members of the practicing bar is in excellent shape," Dean Edward A. Dauer noted in a report to the Board of Governors of the Colorado Bar Association in April.

"This year we again distinguished ourselves by the presence of our trial and appellate advocacy moot court teams among the leaders in national and regional competitions," Dean Dauer said.

In the 1986 regional ABA trial competition the College of Law won both first and second places. In the nationals DU was the only school with two teams among the final eight in the quarter- and semi-final rounds.

In the ABA regional appellate competition DU earned first place and will compete in the nationals in August.

DU took second place in the regional ATLA trial contests this year. Last year the DU team earned first place at the regionals and second place nationally. The team also wrote the best brief and DU senior John Morrison was the best oralist nationally.

The teams are coached by Professor Stephen C. Rench who emphasizes that "there is no doubt in my mind that DU's talent will match anyone, anywhere."

Dean Dauer also noted that the DU team took first place honors in this year's Natural Resource moot court competition — a regional event involving teams from law schools in five states. The competition was originated by DU two years ago and is gaining new interest each year.

DU teams also compete in the Jesup International Law moot court competition where they have sent teams to the national finals three of the last four years. In 1985 the team finished third nationally.

Judge Vollack Appointed to Colorado Supreme Court Post

The Honorable Anthony F. Vollack, JD '56, was sworn in as a member of the Colorado State Supreme Court February 3, filling a vacancy created by the resignation of William D. Neighbors.

Judge Vollack had been a Jefferson county judge for eight years before his appointment to the high court by Governor Richard D. Lamm. Judge Vollack served as a state senator from 1965 to 1973 and lost in the Democratic primary for the U.S. Senate in 1972. Before his appointment as a county judge, he was in private practice and spent a year as an assistant district attorney in Jefferson County.
